

This pool and garden renovation started with the clients wanting a vegetable garden. The old garden was tired and untidy, and contained elements that were neither functioning nor used any more. The garden renovation was designed by Paul Scrivener and built by Kieran Devlin and the team at KMD The Outdoor Construction Company.

The clients required more area around the pool to sit and enjoy the pool, garden and district views. With an active son, they also wanted more space for him to play with his friends. Once the project evolved, it became apparent the coping and paving around the pool had to be changed, as did the tiling inside the pool as some areas had popped off. The original job grew from a simple garden renovation to the entire outdoor space being redone.

The materials chosen had to be sympathetic to the home's existing sandstone base, with spotted gum decking at the far end of the pool and Sydney sandstone paving complementing the style of the house. Frameless glass fencing opened the space as much as possible and mirrors were added to the pillars in the garden to enable the features to be viewed from all angles within the house.

Railway sleepers were incorporated as the borders for the vegetable garden, with stainless-steel garden lights placed throughout the landscape. Formal plantings of buxus, murraya and lilly pilly species, as well as magnolia feature trees, line the property and finish the design in keeping with the fashion of the house.
